

Headline: Common Rock Thrush spotted in Bloreng

By: Miles

Date: Thursday 15 March 2018

In October, my dad and I heard that this bird had been sighted on the Bloreng mountain range near Abergavenny. When we got there, the bird wasn't skittish at all and let me get some really close up pictures. Over the period of time it was there, quite a few of other photographers came to see it.

As we were there looking for the rock thrush, we also saw a sparrowhawk. Luckily, it flew away fairly quickly, so our common rock thrush was safe. It was lots of fun seeing this bird and I really enjoyed the experience and I hope to see it again soon.

