Jamie Carragher has faced controversy over the video that has emerged on the 10th of March, showing him spitting on two Manchester United fans, one of them a 14-year old girl. The 40-year old ex-professional has come under fire this week as he has been temporarily suspended from his £1 million contract. The ex-Liverpool defender was taunted after Liverpool's disappointing 2-1 defeat to rivals Manchester United. The well-known Sky Sports pundit was filmed spitting on Andy Hughes and his daughter after the Man United fans were seen mocking the pundit. In the video it appears that the 40-year old Sky Sports presenter spat on the young girl and then proceeded to drive away afterwards. Freddie, a Manchester United fan, told us: "I think Jamie Carragher was out of order and at such a high position, he shouldn't be letting himself down." We also spoke to Oliver, a young Liverpool fan, and he wasn't happy with Jamie Carragher's actions: "I believe Carragher has let the club down and he should be ashamed. I think it's a disgrace, he has taken it too far by spitting on an innocent girl."

Carragher has recently apologized to the victims and he also said: "It's a stain on my character and I have to accept that." Andy Hughes and his family have decided not to press charges and no fines have been given to the ex-footballer. Andy Hughes admitted that he was also in the wrong, because he had been filming the pundit whilst he was driving.

However, not all Liverpool fans think Jamie Carragher has let the club down. Billy, a young fan living in Hereford, said he thought Carragher should be given another chance: "He did it in the heat in the moment." Carragher has since apologized again and has personally spoken to the 14-year old he spat on. Sky have yet to make another decision on Jamie's future at the telecommunications company. All we know for now is that the now temporarily suspended pundit will be making a return at the end of the 2017-2018 season.
